The National Caucus of Labor Committees (NCLC) is much more dangerous than some people might think at first. In the October issue of Ramparts there is an article by Andrew Kopkind dealing with the heavy CIA move into local U.S. police work. The following quote is from the article:

"All kinds of benefits accrue to the CIA (and presumably to some local forces) from tighter association with the city departments. A former Agency official suggests that a favorite CIA modus operandi overseas might be applicable in American cities: agents organize vigilante groups and then direct their activities against political enemies . . . agents might help a militant religious sect take care of heretics, and who can say that Malcolm X was not a heretic?"

This pattern for subversion fits NCLC like a glove, with their fanatical sect beliefs and their psychological and physical training for violence, and their military and political operations against the left.
